MURAL

PHOTOREALISM

Biography

Ryan Christenson, known professionally as ARCY, is a contemporary muralist and live painter whose work transforms architecture into storytelling.

Working at monumental scale, ARCY creates immersive public artworks that blend photorealism, motion, and layered symbolism. His murals are not simply images on walls, they are experiences designed to stop people in their tracks, spark emotional connection, and give a space cultural identity.

From towering silos and parking structures to major event installations and live brand activations, ARCY's work has been featured across the United States and internationally. His projects range from community-driven civic murals to high-profile collaborations with global brands, entertainment companies, and major cultural events.

What defines ARCY's approach is the fusion of fine-art technique with live performance. During his signature live painting events, audiences watch massive works come to life in real time, turning public art into a shared moment of energy, spectacle, and connection.

Based in Connecticut and working worldwide, ARCY brings a disciplined studio practice together with the logistics, professionalism, and creative vision required for large-scale public and commercial commissions. Each project is built to be bold, meaningful, and unmistakably his.
